

Art and Development

Macedonian Contemporary Art Exhibition at the World Bank and the Embassy of Switzerland

Art and Development

Amidst our aspirations for a better world, art plays a particularly important role. Art opens our minds and stimulates our creativity. In this sense, art is also a catalyst for development – a role the World Bank and the Embassy of Switzerland in Macedonia aim to play.

Therefore, we have joined forces with young artists and national partners in setting up this exhibition. We want to communicate a contemporary image of the country. And we want to connect artists with the many visitors coming to our offices, connect them with a broad international audience via our websites, and support them in their connections with their own society.

Each artist has its own unique way of stimulating our imagination, of connecting us with our dreams. Every change starts with a dream, and our common dream is a better world for all.

Macedonia contemporary art exhibition

The realization of this exhibition would not have been possible without the voluntary contribution of many committed people, including:

Members of the Art Committee: Aneta Georgievska-Shine (adjunct professor University of Maryland), Evangelina Elizondo (acting curator, The World Bank Art Program), Ismet Ramicevic (professor in sculpture), and Zlatko Teodosievski (art critic)

Professors at the Faculty of Fine Arts, led by Dean Dimitar Malidanov, proposing the most encouraging "newcomers"

Colleagues at the Embassy of Switzerland and the World Bank country office, in particular Arthur Kuggeleyn and the "Art and Development" coordinator Anita Bozinovska

World Bank Art Program, Washington D.C., led by Marina Galvani

And all the artists who joined our initiative, offering to give back 10 percent of their sales' receipts to development projects in Macedonia.

Can Swiss support to Macedonian art change the world for the better?

Arts and economics, both powerful tools for change and development, are important to the Swiss. Without economic growth, no development can happen. Without art, outmoded concepts and old habits persist – and the world can not move on. Artists are there not only to decorate the walls and surroundings; they are there also to give something back to the society that is inspiring them. Free and new ideas to challenge the established world are one part of artists' contribution to development. Another decisive part is made of their personal faith and concrete involvement in projects, which directly relate to their image of a better world for all.

The World Bank and the Embassy of Switzerland share the belief that artists can and shall be part of the so-called "development business", in which experts fix problems, overcome obstacles and explore new paths. Keeping open eyes and minds, allowing change to happen and fostering new developments in the interest of all: that's our common ground, which led us to Macedonian artists.

The World Bank in Macedonia – working together to improve people's lives

The World Bank is owned by 185 countries and is one of the world's largest sources of development funding. We provide financing, global knowledge and advice to more than 100 countries worldwide.

Macedonia joined the World Bank in 1994. Since then, we supported the country with more than 1 billion US Dollars in its transition to market economy and in building effective institutions, improving education, social protection and pensions, building and rehabilitating basic transport and energy infrastructure, and preserving natural and cultural heritage.

The World Bank is working with other development partners to support Macedonia's efforts to join the EU. Together we aim at creating conditions to improve people's lives.
