INTRODUCTION

These recruitment notes have been prepared as part of the CGIAR Gender Program’s support to the international agricultural research centers supported by the CGIAR. They are designed to assist the Centers’ efforts to strengthen the recruitment of women professionals and scientists for international staff positions.

The need for the Centers to strengthen mechanisms for reaching women in recruitment is evident by the fact that in 1992 women accounted for only 8% of the pool of applicants for international staff positions in the CG System. This is less than the proportion of women (12%) in international staff positions in 1991.

The notes provide information on a wide range of professional organizations and contacts which can assist Centers to cast their recruitment nets more widely in order to generate a larger and more diverse pool of applicants.

The notes serve as an information supplement to the guideline paper on policies and practices for strengthening the recruitment of women for international staff positions within the Centers:

Guidelines for Strengthening the Recruitment of Women Scientists and Professionals in the International Agricultural Research Centers, by Sarah Ladbury.

RECRUITMENT RESOURCES IN THE USA

The following is a list of scientific and professional organizations that have indicated that they will advertise CGIAR position announcements. The list, organized by discipline, provides information on total membership, the number or percentage of women as members, services offered and fees. All telephone, fax numbers and addresses are located in the United States and would therefore require the appropriate dialing prefixes. Individuals identified as contacts have been informed of the CGIAR’s effort to broaden their recruitment efforts. The contact people listed under Services for each entry have been identified as the most appropriate person to address when sending or enquiring about advertising. Other contact persons included below the address are in positions to disseminate recruitment announcements to the appropriate audience of women scientists, engineers, technicians, and agricultural development specialists.

Information is provided on purchasing mailing lists since direct mail of job announcements to women has proven to be effective in mobilizing applications.

An alphabetical list of organizations is provided at the back of the document (pp. 27-28)

Note:
N/A = Information not available
* = Indicates disciplines with high percentages of women in the USA

Comments: The GENESYS project helps U.S.A.I.D. Bureaus and Missions mainstream gender considerations as a technical concern at all stages of projects rather than viewing women as a special interest issue. It works within the fields of agriculture, private enterprise, and natural resources management. Dr. Estes, an anthropologist, is a valuable contact.
